Retail Trade Shows Greater

Retail trade in May so far, according to merchants here, has been in better volume than in April. The generally unseasonable weather throughout last month had an adverse effect upon retail distribution and caused some concern in retail circles. A continuation of the April let-down in consumer buying, according to some in consumer buying, according to some merchants, would have led to a repetition of price cutting by those retailers who are not well enough financed to stand another period of inactivity.

Stand another period of inactivity.

Seasonal apparel and textiles are the chief products that are moving now, although the stores report an increased demand for garden furniture and implements, paints and other commodities essential to the vernal brightening up process. Special sales in the furniture and floor covering departments also have stimulated sales.

This week saw the opening of the straw hat business in local men's stores. The early business has been small, according to the retailers, but gives promise of assuming normal proportions within another week or two. The lower prices prevailing have been the subject of consumer comment and are expected to stimulate business. Straw hats at the opening of this season are fully one-third less in prices than when such headwear was first offered last year.

The commercial money market was fairly active yesterday. Bankers' acceptance selling rates were slightly higher than on Monday, as shown in the rate schedule issued by the American Acceptance Council. Commercial paper discounts around 7 per cent for market. The interior banks are heavi-er buyers than local institutions. Some exceptionally prime paper is discount-ing as low as 6½ per cent.

Prices Continue Firm at Rug Auction Here

Rug prices yesterday continued to hold firm at the second day of the auction being conducted by the Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Company. As on 500.00 Monday, retailers and small jobbers did most of the bidding and purchasing, and, although individual buying was small compared with former sales, the wide-spread buying and keen competition kept prices at about the level of those established in last month's auction. In some cases slight advances were registered over the prevailing prices of a month ago. In the main, according to buyers at the sale, prices are running about 15 to 20 per cent off the list prices issued by the company after the April sale.

A rumor that found credence among many of the buyers yesterday is to the effect that the Smith company will hold another auction late next month. The mal course of events. Usually the policy of the company has been to hold two auctions a year, one in the spring and one in the fall. most of the bidding and purchasing, and,

Silk Goods Sales Gain

Sales and future orders for silk goods are better this week than a month past according to several leading silk manufacturers here. The retailers are the chief supporters of the primary market at present, and according to all retail distribution throughout the country is exceptionally good. Much of the present buying is for immediate or nearby delivery.

Some of the garment manufacturers are doing a little fall sampling, but the bulk of buying for the fall garment season will not begin for another month, the silk men believe. In the carly fall sampling satins have held a prominent place, particularly the crêpe backed variety.
